DIVORCED.

I have snatched my name from her sullied clutch;
Henceforth her folly and sin will stain No true man's soul with their soiling touch; She can never dishonor my name again.

I have torn her image from out my heart;
She is dead to me now while I wake or sleep; An infinite soundless sea must part Her life from mine, though we both should weep.

In the dreary waste of the coming years, My neck shall be bare of her false, fair arms;
The kisses that lied to my lips, the tears And smiles that cheated, have lost their charms.

And yet, can I drive from my dreams the face Of the winsome girl whom I made my wife?
While it loses each day its dainty grace, As her van tears flow for her ruined life.

Somewhere she is weeping in bitter shame; Hated by women and mocked by men, To her penitent lips is brought the same Full measure of grief that she brought me then.

And the worst of it is that I cannot say "Come back to me out of your grief and shame."
Though I yield my life, there is no way To wipe the stain from her sullied name.

This is the end of it all; for each Ruin, despair and a piercing pain, Sharper than death; while I cannot reach My hand to draw her to peace again.

W. L. ALLEN.

In Sunny Italy.

MILAN, LOMBARDY, ITALY, July 7, '01.

Dear Friends:—This morning we had breakfast, coffee with hot rolls, fresh unsalted butter and honey at half past nine. After breakfast we walked a short distance to the great Cathedral which the Milanese consider the eighth great wonder of the world. Only two are larger, St. Peter's at Rome, and one at Seville. Tomorrow I want to climb to the top 494 steps to see the Alps in the distance, but I don't know whether I shall attempt it. I like this church less than some smaller and less ornate ones I have seen. There were many worshippers. It holds 40,000.

We listened to a preaching service for a short time. The young priest was gesticulating freely and quite gracefully. Professor said he was telling bible stories. The group of people about him listened with interest. It seems strange in these churches to see people going and coming all the time. Some stop and kneel at the different altars of the chapels at the sides. Some are elegant dressed. Some are bareheaded, wearing aprons, or carrying market baskets. One man to-day I noticed ragged, dirty, with stockings.

We went also to the rectory of the suppressed monastery Santa Maria della Grazie and saw Leonardo's picture on the wall, The Last Supper.
You have seen productions or at least photographs. One can't help a feeling of regret that so great a work is existing. If we might only see it as it was! There are inimitable attractions in it still.

This is a prosperous city. I should enjoy seeing more of it than I can. I like the sound of the language. People on the street seem to speak more deliberately than the French and more distinctly. The stores were open as we passed. There are elegant goods in the windows. It was interesting to note the shipping in the towns between Mincio and Genoa. Many were bathing at different places and having a good time in the water. The water is not as salty as the Atlantic. I suppose we have seen thousands of women washing in streams. I should think their backs would break. Many clothes are spread to dry on pebbly beaches and scented water since we left the rushing Gave.

E. F. MAY.

MILAN, ITALY, Sunday, July 7, '01.

My Dear Friends:—It is very pleasant to have ten o'clock breakfast once a week if you like, particularly so today because we didn't get in last night until half past ten. Yesterday we took one of the hardest rides of the summer, Professor thinks, but it was very comfortable except for the dirt.
We rode constantly from nine in the morning when we left Monte Carlo until 10:30, when we reached Milan, except when we had our baggage examined at Ventimiglia on the Frontier and at Genoa where we had 45 minutes for lunch. The ride from Monte Carlo to Genoa is along the Mediterranean shores and we were constantly getting new bits of beauty out of our windows.
The water was right under them at places and the white sand in spots made the water look blotched with light green in the mass of blue. How blue it was! Far away toward the horizon line the sea was a deep purple.
The sky was almost white in comparison with the sea. Yet taken apart, for example through the arches of the Amphitheater at Nimes it is the blue-est sky you ever saw. Between Monte Carlo and Genoa there are fifty or sixty tunnels, most of them short ones, but they are a nuisance, because the noise is troublesome and they shut out the view. At Genoa the road turns toward the north and we climbed and climbed with the help of two engines and finally emerged through a five mile tunnel. Then we went faster through beautiful scenery until it was too dark to see anything. The Ap-penines were in view and we had some glimpses of the Alps. Once or twice we saw a bit of snow. The breeze that came in the open windows was cool and altogether it was a delightful day.

We had a train lunch. We were fortunate in getting two compartments with no strangers and with a corridor at one side. I wish I could give you an idea of the beauty of Monte Carlo and many of those Riviera towns. The houses are a glaring white for the most part and they have such beautiful gardens. Huge palms, century plants, many of them budded, cactus, magnolia trees, eucalyptus, paper trees, oranges, lemons, roses and yuccas —and everywhere the view of the sea.

After watching the gambling in the Casino Friday night we went out in the garden overlooking the sea and looked at the moon and its golden path over the water, while the band was playing a beautiful low melody. As someone said it was a case of "Where every prospect pleases and only man is vile." Most of the hotels are closed for the summer as the busy time is in winter, but they are always busy in the Casino. It is richly ornamented inside with gilding mirrors, paintings and furniture. There are four long tables in different parts of the main hall around which the players sit, men and women together, thirty-five at a table. Most of the women there were flashily dressed, wearing diamonds and lace. Some were gray haired. The men were well dressed. The trouble about the whole thing is that it is made so eminently respectable.

It was interesting to watch the people who were playing. There was no excitement, or at least there was a great attempt to be calm, but so often I noticed men drumming on the felt table, or nervously tapping their finger tips together. We watched one young man in particular, who was playing heavily. He might have been almost any nationality, had fine features, light hair, thin delicate hands. He was winning for a long time. Professor saw him double a 1000 franc note twice, and I saw him double a pile of gold pieces several times. Later in the evening we noticed he was losing, but when I went away I saw that he had a number of paper bills in his hand; whether they were that evening's winnings or not, I do not know. His face was flushed, and evidently he was excited. Professor said he was impressed that night more than ever with the fact that gambling is only a degree of insanity. There was hardly a sane man there. They tell of a man who lost two fortunes there, who was given a pension by the managers. They discourage suicide and try to keep things respectable.
